Take part in shaping Europe's sustainable energy future

People are at the heart of "energy transition". Often they are not aware of or interested in the effects of climate change on them directly. During this lunchtime event we will highlight the need for a "profound shift in awareness" to transform the quality of the conversation and action among stakeholders. We need to recognise that our preferences and behaviours shape our actions. Real change must begin and be sustained in the minds and hearts of human beings. There is adequate data and evidence on the contribution of human activity to climate change indicating the need for change and that all individuals and countries need to take responsibility and have a commitment to action

Speakers

Anders Marvik, Vice President EU Political Affairs Office at Statoil

Anders is responsible for Statoil's stakeholder management and political and public relations with the EU. He will be reflecting on how industry is also playing a part in helping to shift awareness and consciousness to transform the quality of the conversation and action among stakeholders.

Maureen Goodman, Programme Director of Brahma Kumaris Europe, is one of the pioneers of the Brahma Kumaris work in the UK and has been at the hub of major events and initiatives in the UK and around the world. Maureen is directly involved in the community outreach including youth projects, prison work and environmental initiatives.

Joachim Golo Pilz, Advisor Renewable Energy, Joachim has played a key role since 1003 in establishing the Brahma Kumaris as one of the major users of renewable energies in India. He advocates sustainable solutions through an ethical and value based approach.
